CSEdWeek is Coming: Dec. 4!

Did You Know?

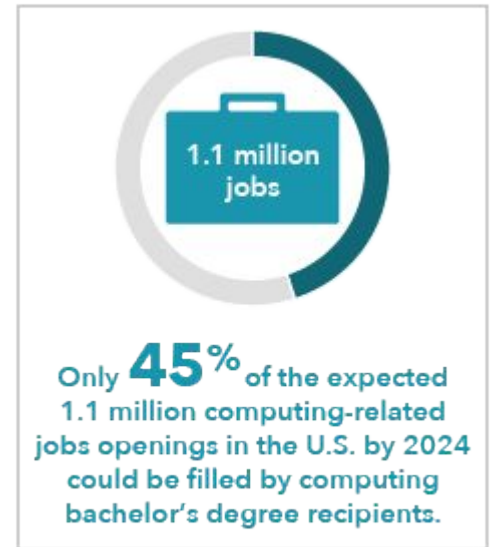

- takes place to coincide with the birthday of Admiral Grace Hopper, a pioneer in the field of CS who was born on December 9, 1906
- was first recognized in 2010 when the 111th Congress passed House Resolution 1560

CSEdWeek is Coming: Dec. 4!

Why It Matters

- There are more tech jobs than qualified candidates.
- #CSEdWeek represents an opportunity to offer informal experiences outside of school, and each of us can get involved.

How Can NCWIT Connect With You?

- Are you hosting an activity event?

Contact socialmedia@ncwit.org, and tell us all about it so that we may highlight and support your change-leading efforts.

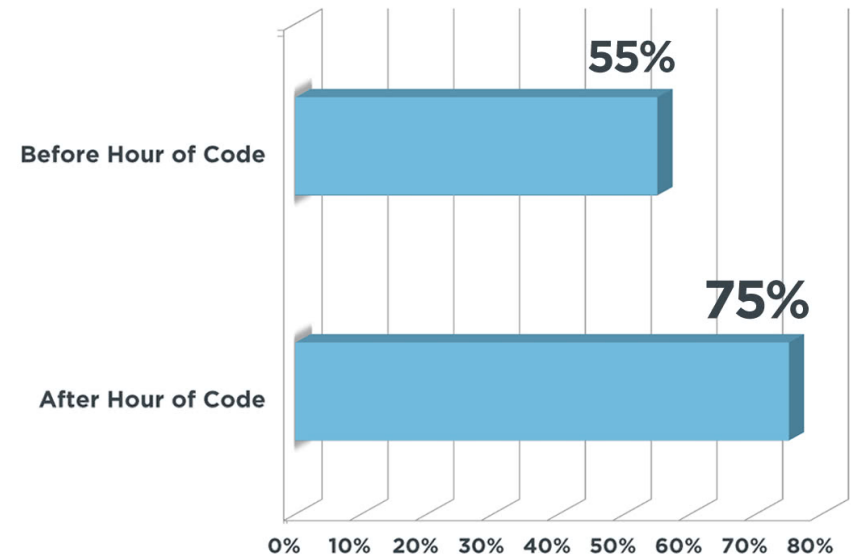

Hour of Code (Dec 4-10)

- Recruit women and girls into computer science classes
- Encourage teachers to start teaching

Self-led activities are easy for anyone to try...

...and they can build their own app or game in just one hour.

% of female high school students with no prior CS experience who agree with the statement “I like computer science”

Join the movement

- Host an Hour of Code: HourOfCode.com
 - Register your event
 - Find an activity (elementary through University, beginner or comfortable)
- Sign up as a volunteer: code.org/volunteer
- Encourage a teacher or school to go further and teach a course: code.org/yourschool

You can help

HourOfCode.com

- Share your experience!
- Break stereotypes
- Help women become creators of technology

- There are lots of ways to celebrate:
 - An Hour of Code for beginners or “comfortable” coders
 - An activity for experienced students (hack-a-thon?)
 - Announcing new efforts in CS
 - Celebrating CS Education Week (social media, posters, t-shirts, stickers, etc.)
